

On the road of Kleitoria-Tripoli, 10 km from Kleitoria, there is the vine of Pausanias with three oversized blooms, climbing on old oaks, next to the old church of St. Nicholas.

Pausanias considered this as a "strange phenomenon" and included it in "Arcadia", but the people had an appetite for an even closer relationship with the vine at village Pangrati. Thus, the tradition "wants" Pausanias to plant the vine with his own hands.

Abstract: This is a photograph of the interior of a church, showing a blue and gold iconostasis with various religious figures and a chandelier hanging from the ceiling.
